Cancer Care FEBRUARY 2023

Helping patients live longer and healthier with ONE Team

By Wendy Goldstein

Complex care, is well, complex—and no more so than when a newly diagnosed cancer patient with comorbidities—specifically high blood pressure, diabetes and elevated cholesterol—has to go for follow-up appointments with multiple care providers at different sites.

What turns “good” care into “poorly coordinated care” is usually a lack of communication between specialists and primary care providers. To bridge the communication and coordination gap and break down the care siloes, Duke population health scholars Leah Zullig and Kevin Oeffinger from the Duke University School of Medicine developed ONE TEAM.

“By engaging the primary care team throughout a patient’s cancer journey and ensuring that all members of a patient’s care team are activated, we can help patients live longer and healthier lives,” said Zullig, who is a professor in population health sciences.

The study, which runs for 18 months in the form of a multi-stage trial with the same participants throughout uses a Sequential Multiple Assignment Randomized Trial—or SMART—format with the goal of informing an adaptive intervention design that encourages them to manage their own health.
